Have you ever wondered what the worst job interview would be like? How would you react if you experienced something as strange as the following examples?//

"I was interviewing for a job that sounded more suitable than any job I had ever applied for. During the two-hour interview, I realised that couldn't have been further from the truth. Towards the end the questions were getting more and more confusing. At the end of the awkwardly long interview, the interviewer apologetically told me that even though I was perfectly qualified for the job, they had already decided to hire somebody else. Having already scheduled the interview on her schedule, she said she didn't want her time to go to waste. I guess my time was so much less important, it didn't matter."//

"In my early twenties, I had an interview at one of the best-known department stores. Wanting to make a long-lasting first impression, I decided to focus on every detail. So I wore my best skirt even though I had gained a few pounds since buying it. I was well-prepared to answer every question briefly but informatively enough, and I was convinced they would hire me. The personnel manager greeted me in a friendly way and my confidence grew greater and greater as I walked in front of him towards his office. Once at the office he looked strangely uncomfortable. Before I managed to say a word, he suggested that I would go to the ladies room to check on my skirt. To my horror, the mirror in the ladies room revealed a huge tear in my skirt. My face turned as red as the underwear that was showing. I was way too embarrassed to return to the office having been showing off my underwear in public. In addition to not getting the job, I decided it was best to do my shopping in another store in the future as well."
