

Give ten versions of the following sentence emphasizing different things syntactically:

“My older brother usually studies quietly in his room every evening.” (SPOTPA)

Every evening, my older brother usually studies quietly in his room.

My older brother, who is older than me, usually studies quietly in his room every evening.

Usually, my older brother studies quietly in his room every evening.

My older brother usually studies quietly in his room every evening, unlike my younger brother who is always loud.

In his room every evening, my older brother usually studies quietly.

My older brother usually studies quietly every evening in his room.

My older brother usually quietly studies in his room every evening.

My older brother usually studies in his room every evening, and he does it quietly.

Every evening, my older brother is usually found studying quietly in his room.

Quietly studying in his room every evening is usually what my older brother does.

Give me more versions with It is ... that

Chat GPT: Sure, here are some examples with "It is ... that" construction:

It is in his room every evening that my older brother usually studies quietly.

It is my older brother who usually studies quietly in his room every evening.

It is every evening that my older brother usually studies quietly in his room.

It is quietly that my older brother usually studies in his room every evening.

It is my older brother's habit to usually study quietly in his room every evening.

It is his room where my older brother usually studies quietly every evening.

It is every evening when my older brother usually studies quietly in his room.

It is my older brother's quiet studying that usually happens in his room every evening.

It is usually my older brother who studies quietly in his room every evening.

It is every evening that my older brother can be found quietly studying in his room.

It is his quiet study routine that has my older brother usually studying in his room every evening.

It is in his room where my older brother usually does his quiet studying every evening.

It is every evening that my older brother commits to quietly studying in his room.

It is my older brother's habit to quietly study in his room every evening.

It is usually in his room that my older brother studies quietly every evening.

It is every evening when my older brother prefers to study quietly in his room.

It is my older brother who usually studies quietly in his room every evening, as a matter of routine.

It is his room that serves as the quiet study space for my older brother every evening.

It is every evening that my older brother dedicates to studying quietly in his room.

It is the quiet atmosphere of his room that allows my older brother to usually study there every evening.